Whether its consideration will be resumed to-morrow, however, depends upon the majority's estimate of the amount of time that will be required to reach the point of final action. Senator Hale has stated his intention to call up the diplomatic appropriation bill to-morrow, but as the friends of the copyright bill are confident the measure is in such shape that it cannot consume much more, it will probably be brought to a final vote before the diplomatic bill is taken up.

THE SILVER QUESTION. FREE COINAGE MEN CONFIDENT THE BILL WILL BE REPORTED SOON. WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The silver question still remains the most absorbing topic of discussion among the members of the House, and there is a constant fear on the part of conservative members that it may at some unexpected time be sprung on the House in an unlooked-for shape. The belief has, however, now become quite general and strong that no silver bill can be taken up in advance of a report from the Coinage Committee. The committee has lately shown a disposition to cease further hearings, and vote on the bill before it.
